

Innovation and Inclusion

Are you an inclusive employer?

Participants wanted for research study!

The PROUD Project would like to hear from persons with a visible physical and/or sensory disability for a research study on inclusive employment, as well as employers who have hired persons with disabilities. Participants will receive an honorarium.

Research shows that individuals with disability often provide innovative solutions to common problems. For example, voice-activated and hands-free technology evolved from applications originally designed for people with disabilities.

We are the PROUD Project, a team of researchers conducting an international project at the University of Toronto on disability and employment. We would like to speak to CEOs or managers at innovative and inclusive businesses and organizations who have employed people with visible physical and/or sensory disabilities. We only require one hour of your time. Conversations will be carried out via video-conference. Please contact us by scanning the QR code above or visiting our website at www.ThePROUDProject.ca
